Great apps & websites for learning a new language

Now that many of us are working and schooling from home, there are dozens of “free” hours each week we would have spent commuting or picking up our kids from school. Why not use this extra time to learn something new?

Learning a foreign language strengthens cognitive skills and forges a deeper connection to other cultures around the world.

Best apps & websites for language learning

1. Babbel:

Maybe you've tried to learn a language in the past but found the lessons overwhelming or not challenging enough. Why not try a different approach? Fast Company calls Babbel "the most innovative education company in 2016" for its practical, minimalist app design. Using a real-life conversational approach to learning, Babbel offers interactive modules that are simple and modern. Check out a full lesson for free to see if their technique suits your needs.

App: Babbel

2. Duolingo:

Duolingo is recommended for people who love to learn multiple languages at the same time. The app works like a game with fun exercises that you must pass before you can proceed to the next level. The "gamification" of the app is highly motivating.

App: Duolingo

3. Rosetta Stone:

Rosetta Stone has provided language instruction for more than 25 years, garnering accolades from Trip Advisor, NASA, and Calvin Klein. You can learn up to 24 different languages by subscription. Prices depend on the language selected and subscription level purchased. A free 3-day trial helps you decide if this platform is right for you.

4. Memrise:

Touted as one of the best language apps in 2017 by Google Play Awards, this platform uses short videos to show how real locals express phrases in conversation. Initial lessons include vocabulary, pronunciation, and tone of voice. For a more immersive experience, Memrise Pro offers games, chatbots and offline lessons.

App: Memrise

5. Hello Talk:

Hello Talk takes a different approach to learning: they connect you to people who speak the language you want to learn. In return, you help them learn your own native language. This lets you be both a teacher and a student while creating a collaborative community of likeminded people. Recommended for those who are home alone and excited to chat with new people.

App: Hello Talk

6. Beelinguapp:

Book lovers, rejoice! Lessons in this app use popular stories, narrated in native dialect, and displayed on screen side-by-side in both languages - yours and the one you're learning. It's almost like doing a linguistic version of karaoke. Available in 13 different languages, the story-based texts are ideal for practicing pronunciation and reading.

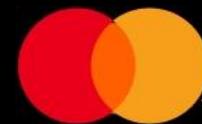

App: Beelinguapp

7. Lirica:

Lirica believes that songs make language memorable. Using songs by the hottest Latin music artists, the Lirica app teaches users vocabulary and grammar in a unique and effective way. Simply select the genre of music you like, listen to the song, and discover translations on screen before being tested on words and phrases.

App: Lirica

8. Drops

Learning a new language can be difficult for visual learners. For those who learn better with graphics and images, Drops teaches language with puzzles and games using mnemonic association to help retain vocabulary. With more than 35 languages to choose from, Drops has won numerous awards because of its innovative approach and inclusion of rare languages such as indigenous Japanese and native Hawaiian.

App: Drops

9. Mindsnacks

This app uses whimsical graphics and games to teach vocabulary, grammar and pronunciation. Simple lessons outline the concepts practiced in each. Subsequent lessons are based on your performance and conversation skills. Ideal for children and young learners because of its charming design.

App: Mindsnacks

10. The French Experiment

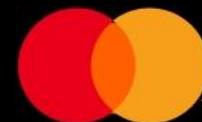

This website teaches French using free online lessons and children's stories translated into French and read slowly by a native French speaker. You'll learn numbers, telling time, and common expressions in addition to grammar and vocabulary. This website is ideal for those who don't like using app-based programs.
